A bank robber was shot and killed
by a posse at Shawnee, Oklahoma, Friday.

Wellesley College is so seriously crippled by the recent fire that it may not be able to restore the burned building and the future of the institution is in doubt.

The Church Peace Union founded by Andrew Carnegie has asked tha
50,000 ministers of all denominations all over the country, preach on the universal peace movement May 17th and advocate a third peace conference at The Hague.

The First National Bank of Gallatin, Tenn., was looted of more than $30,000 Thursday night and the bank records piled on the floor and were burning when discovered. The safe door was open and no explosive had been used. Tracks of one man were found in the snow leading to and from a window and back door. It is believed that the robbery was committed by some one familiar with the bank.

Gov. Colquitt, of Texas, has called for volunteer ranger recruits "who can shoot." Two more outrages by Mexicans have stirred the Governor. An American named Ballard was kidnapped by five Mexicans on Texas soil and escaped by cutting the rope that bound him and diving into the Rio Grande. Several shots were fired at him in the water. Another call for protection has come from opposite Brownsville. Colquitt's fighting blood seems to have been aroused.

Speaking of the concentration of power in the hands of the Auditor and branches of his office, leads the Glasgow Times to sound this note of warning:

"Time and again have rings gotten in control in Kentucky, only to be smashed into smithereens by public sentiment. Kentuckians have never politically submitted to the domination of any man, or set of men. Not even the immortal Goebel could control them, and the small fry now rattling in the shoes of greater and better men need not attempt it. Ring and clique methods mean ruin to the ringsters and clicksters, and spells disaster to the democratic party. There is a terrific battle impending between the people and the professional politicians."

Craze for Luxuries.

The craze for luxuries is one of the prevailing ills of the times. It is perfectly natural for men and women to want the good things of life, but it is mighty bad policy for them to attempt to get these things when they have not got the means. This fact is emphasized by a report from Boston which says that many of the residents of that once conservative town have sacrificed their homes in order to indulge in the luxury of motoring. The story of a man selling his home for the purpose of purchasing an automobile was formerly regarded as a good joke for the vaudeville artists, but now it has become a tragic fact. The report from the Hub may be exaggerated, but there is no reason to doubt that thousands of persons go to the wall every year in a vain and foolish attempt to live beyond their means. The desire to imitate those who are richer than themselves is the rock on which many an otherwise happy home is wrecked. Luxury once tasted seems to get in the blood and the only remedy is a determined effort to get back to the simple life.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Weak, Cold Spells.

Wilmington, N. C.—Mrs. Cora L. Ritter, of this place, says, "I used to have headaches, and blind dizzy spells, and weak cold spells went all over me. Cardui is a remedy for women, which has been helping sick women for nearly a life time. You can absolutely rely upon it. Other people have done the testing and you should profit by their experience. Duty.

One sound always comes to the ear that is open; it is the steady drum-beat of Duty. No music in it, perhaps—only a dry rub-a-dub. Ah, but that steady beat marks the time of the whole orchestra of earth and heaven! It says to you: "Do your work—do the duty nearest you!" Keep step to that drum-beat, and the dearest march is taking you home.—George S. Merriam.

Not Always a Two-Step.

One should play the music of different moods—the serious, the tender, the gay, the sorrowful, the tragic. Music is the artistic expression of life, and life is not always a two-step.

VICTOR HUGO AND HIS DUTY

Desire to See Man Whom He Had Saved From Scaffold Had to Be Set Aside.

A hitherto unpublished story of Victor Hugo is told in Le Cri de Paris. It is generally known and believed in France that Armand Barbes was saved from the scaffold in 1840 by four lines of verse addressed by Hugo to Louis Philippe, king of the French. Yet Barbes had never seen the great man and never saw him during his exile. In 1870, some months before the war between France and Germany, Barbes was dying in The Hague. The exile expressed to M. Claretie, then a young journalist, his regret at never having met the man through whom he had obtained the pardon of the king. Victor Hugo was at Brussels when M. Claretie came to present the desire of the sick man to see him.

Hugo heard the request, and turning to his son Charles said: "Charles, Barbes asks to see me. Duty calls me. We must set out for The Hague this evening."

During the day the great poet and romancer received a pressing letter offering him the presidency of the peace congress at Geneva and begging him to come immediately.

Then said Victor Hugo to his son, "Between one man and humanity I have no right to hesitate. Charles, we shall set out this evening for Switzerland!" And Barbes died without having ever seen Victor Hugo.

ACTIVITIES OF WOMEN.

Nearly a thousand girls who went on a strike in a Philadelphia hosiery mill have organized a union.

Never before in England have so many women candidates offered themselves as candidates for town and metropolitan borough councils.

Three women have already applied to Mayor Mitchell of New York city for jobs in the police department.

Women students will be admitted to membership in the new ski club to be organized at the University of Wisconsin.

It is estimated that militant suffragists in England destroyed property to the value of $2,550,750 during the past year.

One of the hobbies of Queen Mary of England is the collection of a representative group of paintings by modern artists.

The highest wages paid to women shoe workers is to the vamps, who receive 23 cents an hour. The lowest paid are women treers or ironers.

JUST THE ONE.

"Yes," he remarked, stretching himself lazily in the one really comfortable chair in the commercial room, "I'm the youngest child of a big family."

"How many of you are there?" asked a fellow knight of the road.

"Well," replied the lazy one, "three of my brothers are dead, but there were ten of us boys, and each of us had a sister."

"What!" gasped his questioner. "Do you mean to say that there were twenty of you?"

"Dear, dear, no—only eleven."

FOR SAFETY IN MINING.

Gold-mining companies of the Rand field, South Africa, have been experimenting with electric blasting with a view of reducing the danger of miner's phthisis, a disease ascribed to the fine dust that results from blasting. By using electric systems the firing can be done from the surface and the air can be cleared of the fine dust before the miners need to enter the mine.

CHARACTER TOLD BY NOSE

Some Truth and a Whole Lot of Foolishness Contained in the Pattern of the Nose.

Some crack-brain classifiers of humanity have turned their attention lately to the shape of people's noses. It is the nose, we are told now, that makes, or at least reveals, the man.

A Roman nose means aggressiveness, courage, executive ability. It belongs to great warriors and captains of industry. The Grecian nose indicates refinement, often accompanied by timidity. The snub nose indicates a childlike, undeveloped type of mind. And so on, as long as white paper and printing ink can induce the strain of chronicling such imbecilities.

Perhaps there is an element of truth in these conjectures, but it is terribly small. Alexander the Great was a warrior of some repute, whom no one has accused of timidity and few have charged with refinement. His nose, like his blood, was pure Greek. Socrates had a snub nose of pronounced type, but his heroic life of seventy years shows no childish quality, unless it be bluntness of speech. The nose and ambitions of Louis XIV. were Roman, but he was physically a coward, and his executive ability consisted in cementing a despotism that had to be wrecked before his country could resume its progress.

These be individuals. Masses show the same disregard for ready-made rules. Considering their numbers, the Scandinavians of the middle ages were the greatest conquerors the world has known—and Roman noses are as scarce in Scandinavia as black hair. The Japanese are predominantly snub nosed, but he who takes them for children has queer notions of a nursery. The Spartans were Greeks and presumably Greek nosed; but their name is synonymous for dauntless courage and their refinement was a minus quantity.

There is a deal of human nature in any man, no matter what the shape of his nose; and the most unalterable thing about human nature is its variability. The effort to make fixed and certain rules for the judging of mankind is the pastime of fools.

Few Fires in Germany.

While I was attending the morning drill of the Central fire station in Dresden, in Saxony, the captain in command told me that the city had, on an average, about six alarms of fire a week. I casually remarked that we had 25 a day in New York. He looked at me with wonderment and doubt, and when I repeated that we actually had between 20 and 30 alarms of fire a day in the borough of Manhattan alone he threw up his hands and exclaimed: "Thank heaven it is not as bad as that here, or our beautiful city would be destroyed." And so we find, thanks to superior building construction, less hurry and rush of business methods and a wholesome regard on the part of the citizens for certain rigid laws covering the use of explosives and materials of all kinds which usually cause fire, the lot of the foreign fire-fighter is not as strenuous as that of his brother firemen on this side of the water. Because of the excellent character of the buildings abroad fires burn slowly and rarely extend beyond the room or floor in which they start.

Score Was One Up.

"It looks like rain!"
"I beg your pardon."
"I say it looks like rain."
"What does?"
"The weather."
"The weather, my dear sir, is a condition. Rain is water in the act of falling from the clouds. It is impossible that they should look alike."
"What I meant was that the sky looked like rain."

"Equally impossible. The sky is the blue vault above us—the seeming arch or dome that we call the heavens. It does not resemble falling water in the least."

"Well, then, if you are so thunderingly particular, it looks as if it would rain."

"As if what would rain?"

"The weather, of course."

"The weather, as before stated, being a condition, cannot rain."

"The clouds then, confound you. I may not know as much about it as you do, but I've got enough sense to get in out of it, and you haven't," said the man, as he raised his umbrella and walked away in a huff.—Pearson's Weekly.

Knocking the Militants.

Here are some prize-winning descriptive epigrams submitted in a recent advertising contest in which short definitions of a suffragette were asked for:

A suffragette is a woman who thinks she has been devoted long enough.

Not satisfied with the last word, she also wants the first.

She is a woman who needs the "poll" for her vaulting ambition.

A suffragette is a thing of beauty and a jawer forever.

A woman who would rather break windows than clean them.

A woman whose troubles are certainly not "little ones."

One who spends more time airing her views than viewing her heirs.

A woman who will spare no pains to get her rights.

A woman who would rather rock the cradle than the cradle.—Exchange.

Price of Eggs.

"Shall I dissolve another pearl in the chalice for your breakfast?" asked Charmion.

"No," replied Cleopatra. "Pearls are too expensive and commonplace. Sell me another egg."
